The screenshot shows the homepage of the Kentucky Virtual Library. At the top, there is a blue header with the KYVL logo on the left, a search bar labeled 'KYVL QuickSearch' in the center, and several utility icons on the right including 'kdl', 'AZ to Z', and a question mark. Below the header is an orange navigation bar with links for 'About KYVL / Ask', 'Databases', 'For College & Adults', 'For K12 Students', 'For Librarians', and 'For Professionals'. The main content area is divided into several sections: 'Chat with KYVL' with an 'Offline' status indicator; 'KYVL Blog' with recent news items and a 'Go to Blog' button; 'Quick clicks' with icons for 'A to Z list of resources', 'Ask KYVL', 'Courier service', and 'Kentucky Digital Library'; and a 'Showing 6 Groups' list with a 'Display' dropdown set to 'Alphabetically'. The groups listed are: 'About KYVL' (6), 'Databases' (8), 'For College and Adult Learners' (3), 'For K12 Students' (3), 'For Librarians' (14), and 'For Other Professionals' (5). A search bar at the bottom right of the groups section is highlighted in green.

The screenshot shows the Kentucky Virtual Library (KYVL) website. The header includes the KYVL logo and navigation links for 'College & Adults', 'For K12 Students', 'For Librarians', and 'For Professionals'. A dropdown menu is open under 'Databases', listing various resources. 'EBSCO' is highlighted with a red box. Below the menu, there is a 'Chat with KYVL' section and a 'Quick clicks' section with icons for 'A to Z list of resources', 'Ask KYVL', 'Courier service', 'Kentucky Digital Library', and 'KYVL legacy website'. On the right, a 'Showing 6 Groups' section lists categories with item counts: 'About KYVL' (6), 'Databases' (7), 'For College and Adult Learners' (3), 'For K12 Students' (3), 'For Librarians' (12), and 'For Other Professionals' (5). The 'Databases' group is also highlighted with a red box.

Abstract: The article discusses how microorganisms that survive the inhospitable conditions on Earth like the depths of coal mining caves might turn out to be the tools that can treat some of the deadliest diseases. Topics include the key role played by compounds in plants, soil and the sea in modern treatments for various conditions, an overview of Kentucky's Appalachian region, described as the largest biodiverse hot spot in the U.S., and the efforts of University of Kentucky professor Jon Thorson.

CURES IN COAL MINES

Microorganisms that survive the most inhospitable conditions on Earth might be the tools to treat some of the deadliest diseases

THE MATRIX ENERGY Mine No. 1 in eastern Kentucky stretches 7 miles to its deepest point. Tiny cars creak along tracks laid on the ground in the bowels of the operation, opened in 2004, and miners here collect 4,500 tons of coal each day. But Jon Thorson, a professor of pharmaceutical sciences at the University of Kentucky and director at the Center for Pharmaceutical Research and Innovation, isn't all that interested in fossilized carbon. He believes the true value to be found in the mine lies in the soil and rocks. Thorson is digging for blockbuster drugs.

Natural medicine is often associated with ancient civilizations or bogus alternative treatments endorsed by celebrities. However, unique compounds in plants, soil and the sea have played a major role in modern treatments for conditions ranging from bacterial infections and malaria to high cholesterol and cancer. According to one study, as much as 50 percent of drug compounds on the market have their origins or are structurally based upon some type of natural product.

And there's so much more still to be uncovered. According to some research, only about 1 percent of bacterial and 5 percent of fungal species are currently known, which means it's plausible that there's something natural for everything that ails us.

Thorson says Kentucky's Appalachian region is a good place to start looking. With more than 6,300 species, the area is the largest biodiverse "hot spot" in the U.S. Globally, it's rivaled only by China in terms of its forest diversity. "You could spend the rest of your life [here] just looking for organisms," he says. Scientists like Thorson who go out into the natural world with hopes of identifying the next great cure usually head to locations where they might find "extremophiles"—organisms that thrive in extreme environments uninhabitable for most living things, because of, say, high pressure or high temperature. These harsh environments—like the bottom of the Matrix mine—are also often devoid of natural light and have a limited amount of nutrients to support life. As a result, the extremophiles (or "exotic microorganisms," as Thorson calls them) that live there need to develop certain traits to ensure survival. And by figuring out the naturally produced chemicals that give the extremophiles their extreme traits, we can sometimes harness those characteristics and put them to use for human good.

All living creatures produce primary metabolites, such as vitamins, simple sugars and amino acids, which are created in part through the chemical transformations that are constantly going on in an organism's cells. These primary metabolites are the things required for the normal growth,

Natural medicine is often associated with ancient civilizations or bogus alternative treatments endorsed by celebrities. However, unique compounds in plants, soil and the sea have played a major role in modern treatments for conditions ranging from bacterial infections and malaria to high cholesterol and cancer. According to one study, as much as 50 percent of drug compounds on the market have their origins or are structurally based upon some type of natural product.

Thorson says Kentucky's Appalachian region is a good place to start looking. With more than 6,300 species, the area is the largest biodiverse "hot spot" in the U.S. Globally, it's rivaled only by China in terms of its forest diversity. "You could spend the rest of your life [here] just looking for organisms," he says. Scientists like Thorson who go out into the natural world with hopes of identifying the next great cure usually head to locations where they might find "extremo-philés"—organisms that thrive in extreme environments uninhabitable for most living things, because of, say, high pressure or high temperature. These harsh environments—like the bottom of the Matrix mine—are also often devoid of natural light and have a limited amount of nutrients to support life. As a result, the extrem-ophiles (or "exotic microorganisms," as Thorston calls them) that live there need to develop certain traits to ensure survival. And by figuring out the naturally produced chemicals that give the extremophiles their extreme traits, we can sometimes harness those characteristics and put them to use for human good.

All living creatures produce primary metabolites, such as vitamins, simple sugars and amino acids, which are created in part through the chemical transformations that are constantly going on in an organism's cells. These primary metabolites are the things required for the normal growth, development and reproduction of any living thing. Thorson is interested in secondary metabolites—the unique compounds that give an organism the ability to do all the other things it might do, from looking a certain way to secreting toxins to fight off enemies. In the case of extrem-ophiles, though, it's like these microorganisms are superheroes and secondary metabolites are their special powers.

Valuable extremophiles are being discovered all over the world. In 1995, researchers sampled fungus growing in a deep, abandoned, open-pit copper mine in Butte, Montana. The group identified valuable compounds from the fungus living in this toxic waste dump filled with highly acidic and metal-heavy sludge, and they published some 20 papers about their findings. Some of these molecules they found inhibited specific pathways of cancer, including leukemia and melanoma cancer cells and non-small cell lung cancer. Others were found to hit targets involved in inflammation or to kill certain bacteria such as Methicillin-resistant Staphylococcus aureus. And in China, at the Kunming Institute of Botany, Chinese Academy of Sciences, researchers have isolated some novel molecules from organisms in tin mine waste streams, including naphthospi-ronone A, which has antimicrobial properties.

Saving Searches / Creating Alerts

The screenshot displays the Small Business Reference Center search interface. At the top, there is a navigation bar with links for New Search, Publications, Thesaurus, Business Videos/Images, and More. A search bar contains the text "business bookkeeping" and a "Search" button. Below the search bar, there are links for Basic Search, Advanced Search, and Search History (highlighted with a blue box). The "Search History/Alerts" section includes links for Print Search History, Retrieve Searches, Retrieve Alerts, and Save Searches / Alerts (highlighted with a red box). Below this, there are buttons for Search with AND, Search with OR, Delete Searches, and Refresh Search Results. A table lists search results with columns for Search ID, Search Terms, Limiters and Expanders, and Actions. The table contains four rows of search results, with the first row (S4) highlighted by a blue box. Below the table, there is a "Refine Results" section on the left and a "Search Results: 1 - 6 of 6" section on the right. The search results section shows a list of articles with titles, authors, and PDF full-text links.

Creating / Managing Folders

The screenshot displays the EBSCOhost interface for a user named Nancy. The top navigation bar includes 'New Search', 'Publications', 'Sign Out', 'Folder', 'Preferences', 'Languages', 'Help', and 'Exit'. The user's account information 'Update My Account Not Nancy? Sign in here.' is visible in the top right. The main content area is titled 'My Folder: Articles' and shows a list of three articles. A red box highlights the action buttons: 'Select / deselect all', 'Delete Items', 'Copy To', and 'Move To'. A green oval highlights the right-hand side menu with options: 'Print', 'E-mail', 'Save as File', and 'Export'. A blue arrow points to the 'Retirement Planning' folder in the left-hand navigation pane. The article list includes titles like 'Be The Architect of Your Retirement', 'Why retirement planning is so important for women: They often face a considerably tougher time than men.', and 'Women's unique challenges in retirement planning.' Each article entry shows the author, publication details, and a 'PDF Full Text' link.
