State Archives Celebrates 50 Years of the Public Records Law

Kentucky Archives Month is special to those of us in the Public Records Division this year, because we commemorate the 50th Anniversary of Kentucky’s Public Records Law. This statute assigns broad power and responsibility for managing public records to the Kentucky Department for Libraries and Archives and to the State Archives and Records Commission. The law provides that public records will be created and retained to guarantee the rights of citizens, document the actions of government, and ensure accountability of public officials. Kentucky’s Public Records Law is one of the strongest in the nation.

The Public Records Law had its genesis in 1936, when Dr. Thomas D. Clark and Dr. James Martin of the University of Kentucky learned that several trucks, packed with public records taken from the state Capitol building, were ready to depart for a scrap dealer in Louisville. Dr. Clark and Dr. Martin raced to Frankfort in the pre-dawn hours, awakened Governor A. B. “Happy” Chandler, and secured the Governor’s approval for removing those records to the University of Kentucky for safekeeping, rather than selling them for scrap.

That evening solidified Dr. Clark’s belief that Kentucky needed a central state archives and records management program, so he and other like-minded individuals worked for twenty years to secure passage of a public records law. In reading his correspondence from those twenty years, Dr. Clark’s indefatigable devotion to the importance of the public

Kentucky Archives Month Observed

Kentuckians throughout the Commonwealth will celebrate their rich archival heritage during the first annual Kentucky Archives Month in October 2008. The theme of Kentucky Archives Month is “Celebrating the Commonwealth Record”, which commemorates the fiftieth anniversary of Kentucky’s Public Records Law. For the past six years, Kentucky has observed Archives Week through a week-long celebration during October. This year we are pleased to announce a transition to a month-long celebration to be held each year in October. Kentucky’s Archives Month also coincides with a national celebration of American Archives Month.

Research Opportunities at the State Archives
Senator Tom Garrett Papers

The governors’ papers are among the most historically significant collections available at the State Archives.
Since we do have the official papers of most Kentucky governors, researchers often ask whether we have the papers of members of the legislature as well.
Unfortunately, very little record material from individual legislators has ever been transferred to the State Archives.

One notable exception would be the papers of Tom Garrett, a Democrat from Paducah who served in the State Senate from 1962-1978. Garrett held the office of Senate Majority Floor Leader during the 1974, 1976 and 1978 sessions of the General Assembly. After his death in 1979, a collection of his papers was given to Paducah Community College, which later donated those records to Murray State University. In December 2007, the unprocessed papers were transferred to KDLA as a more appropriate repository, since they document Garrett’s official activities as a State Senator. The records have now been arranged and described and are available for research.

Garrett served in the State Senate for nearly twenty years; however, the records in this collection cover the 1976 session almost exclusively. About half of the records consist of constituent correspondence, in which citizens from Garrett’s district and around the state wrote letters urging him to support or oppose various proposed legislation. Judging by the volume of correspondence, the most pressing issue for many Kentuckians during the 1976 session seems to have been the Equal Rights Amendment. Garrett’s papers include impassioned letters from concerned citizens on both sides of this debate.

The remainder of the Garrett collection consists of administrative records documenting the activities of the Senate and Garrett’s role as Majority Floor Leader, including drafts of proposed legislation, resolutions and amendments; Senate roll call sheets; Senate orders of the day; and Senate Rules Committee reports.

While the Garrett collection is not large, it does provide an interesting window into the everyday workings of the Senate, and gives a unique perspective on the concerns and issues important to Kentuckians in the mid-1970s. Researchers interested in political and social history will find these records to be especially valuable.
record in our lives speaks on every page. He spent time writing each governor, many legislators, and other constitutional officers, urging that a law be passed. Legislation created a Records Control Board in 1950, but the board was given only limited authority. The Kentucky General Assembly finally passed legislation modeled on the federal laws dealing with government records in 1958.

At the time the Public Records Law was enacted, Kentucky had no archival facility for state and local government records. Fifty years later, the central state archives now holds over 100,000 cubic feet of permanent public records from state and local offices, and two records center facilities provide cost effective storage for an additional 195,000 cubic feet of non-permanent records. In 1958, there was no control over government records; now there are strong records management regulations, policies, and procedures in place for both state and local government agencies. From being one of the last states to have a central archival and records management authority, Kentucky is now in the forefront on many issues and projects, including a model local records grant and assistance program and over twenty years of work on electronic records demonstration and research grants.

Kentucky’s Public Records Law rests on shared responsibility between the State Archives and Records Commission, the Kentucky Department for Libraries and Archives, and the agency creating the records. In making records management decisions, the originating agency provides expertise on why records are created and how they are used; KDLA provides professional records management assistance; and the Commission supplies checks, balances, and protections through its review by a diverse membership. It has worked well for fifty years, and works well today.

As the seventh state archivist in these fifty years, I take great pride in the responsibility for carrying out Kentucky’s efficient and practical public records law. I appreciate Dr. Clark’s foresight in recognizing the need for a strong statute, and his perseverance in pursuing this goal for so many years. I’ve personally watched this law in action for twenty-five years, and have seen the wisdom of this tiered, deliberative process and the shared responsibility for records management, by the Commission, by KDLA, and by the agency that creates the records. The documentation of our government is made better through the precedents and processes of the Kentucky Public Records Law.

As always, Dr. Clark, our mentor and friend, said it best. At a dinner given in his honor in 1984 by the Friends of Kentucky Public Archives, he said “The keeping of the public record of a civilized people is a continuing responsibility where properly the task is never completed. The vigilance necessary to preserve the record is synonymous with that of preserving the freedom of an open and democratic society.”

Making a Difference

The Archives Research Room will be expanding its collection soon due to the generous donations made by Donna Stark Thompson and Col. (ret) Armando Alfaro. Ms. Thompson’s donation will be used to purchase delayed or special birth certificates and affidavits on microfilm for individuals born between 1870 and 1910. Colonel Alfaro’s gift will be used to purchase Kentucky State Guard records and National Guard enlistments for individuals born between 1875 and 1920. Both of these collections will prove extremely valuable for researchers examining the late 19th and early 20th centuries.

Thank you so much for your help!
We really appreciate it!
