High elevation, high volume storage characterizes the new archival vault addition at the Provincial Archives of New Brunswick (PANB), Canada, shown below. The PANB has comparable responsibilities to KDLA’s Public Records Division and chose this economical design to maximize storage capacity in limited ground space. In use at more than 40 universities across the United States, this functional design is favored for KDLA’s own archival facility expansion.

Archives in Major Space Crunch; Building Addition Sought

KDLA’s State Archives facilities are currently at capacity and no longer meet the continuing records storage needs of state and local agencies. During the last ten years, KDLA has requested construction of additional storage space for public records of permanent value in every biennial budget, but no funds have been appropriated to date.

In the past five years, external consultants have assessed KDLA’s archival storage situation, verified projected growth in its storage requirements, validated KDLA’s need for additional archival storage capacity, and recommended approaches to meet these needs.

Make your plans now: register, attend the Friends’ Summer Archives Institute!

The Past in Public Records is the theme of the 21st annual Kentucky Archives Institute. The annual event, which local and family historians eagerly look forward to each year, is co-sponsored by the Friends of Kentucky Public Archives, Inc. and the Kentucky Department for Libraries and Archives (KDLA). Each year, the Institute features a different theme, and interesting speakers explore the research potential of different kinds of Kentucky public records. Plan to attend this year’s event by completing the registration form on page 3 of this newsletter.
Research Opportunities at the State Archives

Kentucky is known all over the world for its thoroughbred racing meets. Every spring the horses take to the track, first at Keeneland and then at Churchill Downs, culminating every year in the Kentucky Derby on the first Saturday in May. Racing continues through the summer and fall at tracks throughout the state. Several series of records from the Kentucky Racing Commission in the State Archives can help to document the history of horse racing in the 20th century in Kentucky.

The Racing Commission was created in 1906 and regulates the horse racing industry in the state. The “Minutes of the Racing Commission” are available for 1956-1998. The minutes reflect discussions of licensing questions, the issuance of dates for race meets, and the oversight of wagering. Occasionally the minutes will also cover hearings on decisions of track stewards, including the suspension of jockeys or trainers.

The “Supervisor Books,” which date from 1914-1958, contain records of meets held at tracks around Kentucky. The volume for 1914, for example, includes information on the meets held at Keeneland, Churchill Downs, Douglas Park and Latonia. Every race held at each of the tracks is recorded. The entries list each horse by name and the amount wagered on it, the order of finish, and payouts on a two dollar bet for win, place and show. In the sixth race at Churchill Downs on May 9, 1914, “Old Rosebud” was the winner in a field of seven, and paid $3.70, $3.00 and $2.80. A total of $80,248 was wagered on this race, which was the 40th running of the Kentucky Derby. Other records of interest include “Old Hands Ledgers” and various financial journals. These volumes contain entries for licenses issued to jockeys, apprentices, and trainers and the amount of fees paid for those licenses. John McCabe, the jockey on “Old Rosebud” in the 1914 Derby, paid $5.00 for his jockey license that year.

There are excellent sources on the Racing Commission in the State Publications collection. The “Biennial Reports” cover the years 1906-2001, and contain information on and regulations of the horse racing industry in Kentucky. The “Rules of Racing” are sometimes listed in the Biennial Reports, but separate volumes are also available for 1933, 1938 and 1945. The “Rules” are well-defined and cover all aspects of racing, sometimes even including the payment of jockeys. In 1933, for example, the rules state that a jockey be paid $15 for riding a winning mount, $10 for second place, and $7 for all other mounts. Occasionally the rules changed. The use of spurs was allowed in 1933 but had been prohibited by 1938.

Horse racing plays an important part in the history and culture of Kentucky. The records and publications of the Racing Commission provide a significant source of information for researchers interested in learning more about this traditional Kentucky industry.

During the state’s 2005 Capital Planning cycle, KDLA is again seeking support for a building expansion. The projected design features high elevation shelving and high storage capacity, within a limited footprint. It is a necessary complement to the Archives’ digital initiatives and its developing electronic records archives program, is modular in design, and could be expanded in the future, should demand warrant.

Every day, new records of permanent value are created. These records

- protect the legal, financial, and other rights of the government and its citizens,
- ensure continuity and consistency in administration,
- assist agency officials and their successors in making informed policy and program judgments,
- provide information required by the General Assembly and others to oversee the agency’s activities, and
- document the agency’s organization, structure, and achievements.

Records are essential to the security and continuity of government and to safeguarding the rights of Kentuckians. Action needs to be initiated now to secure a recommendation for funding authorization in the 2006 session of the General Assembly. At a time of heightened anxiety in Kentucky about national security issues and concern over the state’s vulnerability to attack or dislocation, it’s critically important to remember that the State Archives is a central element of the state’s information infrastructure, on which all citizens depend, and to provide it with secure, well designed facilities which protect and assure access to these vital resources.

If an expanded facility is not built, government operations and the rights of citizens are placed at risk. Continuity in government operations relies on information, in the form of records, showing what business agencies have done (accountability) and how they have carried out their responsibilities (transparency), both of which are key factors in establishing and maintaining the confidence and trust of those who have a stake in those operations. These records must be protected and accessible, and an expanded facility can ensure that the needs of state and local government agencies are well met.

Technology Developments

KDLA regularly receives questions about the impact of electronic technology on archives and records management. This feature shares both questions and answers with For the Record (FTR) readers.

- If you had the storage capacity, would you try to capture the whole universe of electronic records? How do you decide what to keep and what not to keep?

Up to 95% of all records, regardless of format, are non-permanent and do not merit long term retention. Among records deemed permanent, a small percentage is valuable enough to warrant the expensive storage and continued reformatting necessary to keep them in an electronic format permanently. Permanent records that traditionally have a high retrieval rate and data types that are best saved in electronic format rather than microfilm (e.g., GIS systems, databases, and web sites) are the best candidates for long term retention in electronic format. These also provide the greatest technical and economic challenges.

You Can Help!

The Archives Research Room at the State Archives always has equipment or supplemental resource needs for which state funds are not available. Private donations have long played an important role in permitting the State Archives to fill these gaps. One item that would be very helpful is the fifth edition of the popular Genealogist’s Address Book which is now available in both paperback and CD-ROM. The Genealogist’s Address Book provides names, addresses, phone numbers, hours, and publications for genealogical organizations in five broad areas. The section on national addresses includes the National Archives and its regional centers, government departments and agencies, libraries, and genealogical and historical societies. State-by-state listings are provided for vital records offices, county and regional archives, libraries, and genealogical and historical societies. Ethnic archives, libraries, and societies are grouped with religious organizations and archives. A section on special resources includes lineage and hereditary societies, surname registers, adoption information, immigration research centers, computer-interest organizations, and other topics. Finally, complete bibliographic information is given for genealogical periodicals and newsletters.

The publisher’s prices are $49.99 plus $4.00 shipping and handling for the paperback and $19.99 plus $4.00 shipping and handling for the CD-ROM. Please consider making a donation, large or small, to the Friends, for the purchase of this Address Book. Any amount - five, ten, or twenty dollars - will help make a difference. Your donations to the Friends are always tax deductible.

Please make your checks payable to: Friends of Kentucky Public Archives, Inc., and mail it to the address on the Friends’ membership form below.

Strawberries ready for market, (ca. 1937-1938). Although not a huge crop in Kentucky, strawberries are regularly produced in the western part of the state. (A Work Projects Administration photographer captured this strawberry crop packed for market in 30 pound crates, each composed of over 24 quarts.)
