A capacity crowd filled the main meeting room of the West Lot Dwelling at Shaker Village of Pleasant Hill November 16th to hear Dr. Yvonne Honeycutt Baldwin, Professor of History and Chair, Department of Geography, Government and History, Morehead State University, discuss research for her new book, Cora Wilson Stewart and Kentucky’s Moonlight Schools: Fighting for Literacy in America. Baldwin was the featured speaker at the 17th annual Public Archives Symposium, a yearly event sponsored by the Friends of Kentucky Public Archives, Inc. to broaden public understanding of the state’s original historical records and underscore how they are being used for scholarly research and publications.

General Assembly Considers State Archives’ Expansion

Prospects for additional records storage at the State Archives took a favorable turn March 7th with the inclusion of construction funds for an expanded archives facility in the House budget bill. The House Appropriations and Revenue Committee recommended including $8.055 million in the House Committee Substitute to HB 380 and voted 97-0-1 to send its version of the Executive Branch budget to the Senate for its consideration.

The State Archives, at the Kentucky Department for Libraries and Archives’ (KDLA) main building on Coffee Tree Road in Frankfort, has been at maximum storage capacity since June 2005 and has been struggling to meet state and local government’s continuing need for storage of permanently valuable records for some time. KDLA’s request for an archival facility expansion was among a small number of capital construction requests approved by the Capital Planning Advisory Board (CPAB) in its 2005 review cycle. The Board, the official review body for capital requests from state government agencies and public universities, evaluates capital requests in the year prior to even year sessions of the General Assembly, when state agency budgets are considered and approved.

"The keeping of the public record of a civilized people is a continuing responsibility where properly the task is never completed. The vigilance necessary to preserve the record is synonymous with that of preserving the freedom of an open and democratic society." - Dr. Thomas D. Clark, former Historian Laureate of Kentucky
Research Opportunities at the State Archives

The office of Auditor of Public Accounts was created by one of the first acts passed by the state legislature in its initial session in June 1792. The Auditor was appointed by the General Assembly until the third constitution in 1850 made it an elective office. The specific functions of the office changed repeatedly over the years, but in general the Auditor was responsible for the oversight of the fiscal activities of state government. In consequence, this office created and maintained a number of different types of financial records. These records can be quite detailed and are invaluable to any study of the day-to-day financial workings of state government.

The activities of the Auditor’s Office are documented in a number of different series of records, which can contain overlapping information. These include Day Books, Warrant Registers, Ledgers, and Journals. A Day Book is basically a daily log of financial activities as they occur, and includes the amount of the transaction and the name of the person receiving funds or paying into the system. The Warrant Register is a sequential listing of warrants issued by the state for disbursements made for any reason, and includes the warrant number, date, amount, and to whom paid.

In general, a Ledger is arranged by subject and a Journal by date, but they are usually cross-referenced and may contain more detailed information than the Day Books and Registers. For example, the Ledger for 1816-1818 contains several entries under the heading “Negroes Executed.” On May 8, 1818, warrant #580 was issued for the sum of $650. The entry lists a reference to page 320, which leads to the corresponding Journal for that date. The Journal entry states that warrant #580 was issued for payment of $650 “to William Stith for the value of a Negro man named Reubin hung by order of the Hardin County Court on March 14, 1818.” The state was therefore reimbursing a slave owner for the value of his “property” lost as a result of a verdict of the court.

Most of the entries are more mundane, but can still hold interesting information. An entry for March 31, 1817, documents the payment of $899.90 to Governor Gabriel Slaughter to cover “a fractional part of his 4th quarter salary for 1816 and his 1st quarter salary for 1817.” Among the hundreds of other entries from 1817 are records of military expenditures, payments to individuals for the upkeep of “lunatics,” and bounties paid for the return of escaped criminals.

The records series described above are available in one form or another for the years 1792-1939, although there are significant gaps in each series. Similar records are also available for the Office of Second Auditor, which was created in 1839 to help relieve the Auditor of the burden of some of his extensive duties. The position of Second Auditor was discontinued after the passage of the third constitution in 1850, although a few records were still created for several years thereafter as the office gradually turned its functions back over to the Auditor.

Researchers may find the records of the Auditor of Public Accounts and of the Second Auditor to be an important and largely untapped source for unique information concerning the workings of Kentucky state government and the varied activities of its citizens.

President Bush’s proposed FY 2007 budget once again zeroes out the National Historical Publications and Records Commission (NHPRC). The President’s 2006 budget also recommended no funding for the NHPRC. Thanks to constituent contacts from all over the country, including many calls and letters from Kentucky, Congress ultimately appropriated $7.5 million for NHPRC this year. The joint advocacy effort of the Council of State Archivists, the Society of American Archivists, and the National Association for Government Archives and Records Administrators is again asking concerned citizens from around the country to contact their representatives in Congress about this issue.

In addition to asking for continued funding for NHPRC, the advocacy coalition is asking for support for the Partnership for the American Historical Record (PAHR). The PAHR would offer more federal money for records in state and local archives, libraries, historical societies, and other repositories around the country. A $20 million appropriation for the NHPRC would allow the NHPRC national grants program to be fully-funded, while allocating more resources for archival repositories on a state and local level through the PAHR.

For guidelines on contacting your representative, please see http://savearchives.pbwiki.com/. This site has guidelines on writing to Congress (remember, a faxed letter is the best), suggestions for writing a resolution from an organization, a detailed explanation of the PAHR, and lists of relevant members of Congress. Kentucky members of the Appropriations Committees are Rep. Anne Northup and Rep. Hal Rogers in the House, and Sen. Mitch McConnell in the Senate. Faxes to these three members are the most urgent, but faxes to the representative from your particular district are important, too. Members should be contacted prior to April 1, so please do this as soon as possible. For more information and background material, please see the Society of American Archivists website: http://www.archivists.org/news/nhprc-FY2007-action.asp.

Since 1958, KDLA has been the state’s central repository (the State Archives) for records of continuing value and has been responsible for housing, preserving and making them available for research. During this time, recordkeeping practices have continued to evolve. New record formats are emerging and have been adopted by public agencies. Increasingly, records are available to the public in electronic form. KDLA has created an Electronic Records Archives (E-Archives) as a way of managing digital public records and making them available to our citizens. The E-Archives is a way of expanding KDLA’s capacity to manage digital records of archival value. Initially, the E-Archives will contain a limited selection of electronic records, including meeting minutes of state-level boards, commissions and legislative committees, and electronic state agency publications. We hope you will find that this new resource will speed your access to a wide range of information. Please visit the E-Archives at http://www.e-archives.ky.gov/.

The Kentucky State Historical Records Advisory Board received $10,000 yearly grants from the NHPRC in 2004 and 2005, to assist in the work of the SHRAB and to bring continuing education workshops for practicing archivists to Kentucky venues. The SHRAB received another $10,000 grant from the NHPRC for 2006, and will again bring two workshops to Kentucky during this calendar year.

1) The first workshop will be held at the University of Kentucky on Thursday, May 11, 2006, the day prior to the Kentucky Council on Archives spring meeting. The workshop is offered by the Society of American Archivists, in cooperation with the Kentucky SHRAB and the University of Kentucky. It will provide an introduction to the new archival description standard, DACS. To read more about the workshop Describing Archives: A Content Standard (DACS) see the Society of American Archivists' webpage at: http://www.archivists.org/prof-education/workshop-detail.asp?id=1673

2) The SHRAB and SAA will offer a two day workshop, Copyright: The Archivist and the Law, in November 2006, also at the University of Kentucky. Planning for this workshop is being finalized.

The SHRAB will pay a portion of the registration fee for archivists working in Kentucky to attend either, or both, of these workshops. The SAA website has all the details on the SHRAB discount.

Construction on the "new" Kentucky State Capitol in Frankfort began in 1905, and the building was dedicated on June 1, 1910. A set of original architectural drawings for part of the interior of the Capitol is in the State Archives. These drawings were studied by the engineers in charge of a recent major renovation of the building.
